I think it is safe to say that at one point or another, each and every one of us has been or will be prescribed a medication to treat either an illness or an ailment in our lifetime.

Blood banks follow strict guidelines for accepting or deferring donors who have been in malaria-endemic areas.

Under her leadership, providing the highest possible quality of patient care has become the guiding principle for developing work plans and programs to support pharmacists and technicians.